

The East Ramapo Central School District student body is composed of approximately 70% ELLs (English Language Learners), with a significant population of new arrivals from South and Central America and Haiti. As part of the District's efforts to educate and elevate our ELLs, and to celebrate the multiculturalism of East Ramapo, high school students have the opportunity to receive the New York State Seal of Biliteracy. This video was produced at the request of the Department of Multilingual Education, who wanted to showcase our multilingual students' academic success and to attract multilingual underclassmen to the program.
