

This 6-part video series highlights the extraordinary educators of the Davis School District who have not only dedicated their lives to teaching but also answered the call to serve in the U.S. Armed Forces. Through their inspiring stories, we showcase the dedication, resilience, and impact of military service both in and out of the classroom. Meet a second-grade teacher who once built bombs in the Air Force, now shaping young minds with the same precision and care. Discover the journey of an Army paratrooper who now leads as an assistant principal, applying lessons in leadership learned from the skies. Hear from a military spouse who has spent 18 years enduring deployments, relocations, and the challenge of starting over proving that service isn't just about those in uniform, but also the families who stand beside them. And explore the story of an IT technician whose passion for aeronautics took him around the world with the Air Force before bringing him back to serve the students of Davis. Through these stories, Military Connections honors the district's commitment to those who serve while showing students the profound, positive impact military service can have on a person's life. Whether in the military or the classroom, these educators embody discipline, perseverance, and a deep sense of duty—values that inspire the next generation.
