

Hall Pass With Dr. Campbell is a monthly YouTube series that launched in 2024, providing an engaging platform to share fun and interesting stories or happenings within Elmhurst District 205. Designed to support effective communication across the district, the series helps staff, students, and the broader community stay informed about key topics, initiatives, and achievements. Each episode features Dr. Campbell in conversations with district staff and students, creating an open and accessible space to discuss relevant topics and celebrate accomplishments. By highlighting the work of instructional coaches, teachers, and students, Hall Pass not only informs but also fosters stronger connections within the district. The series enhances transparency, allowing the community to hear firsthand about the innovative work happening in schools and the impact it has on students.

One standout episode features Ryan Sloan, a York High School baseball player who was drafted in the second round of the 2024 MLB Draft. His story exemplifies the district's commitment to student success, reinforcing the positive outcomes achieved through strong support systems and educational opportunities. By providing clear, engaging, and consistent communication, Hall Pass With Dr. Campbell strengthens relationships between district leadership, staff, and families. The series helps build a shared sense of pride in Elmhurst D205 by showcasing achievements, fostering dialogue, and reinforcing the district's commitment to excellence. Whether you're a parent, educator, or district employee, Hall Pass offers an inviting space to stay connected and celebrate the great work happening across the district.
